

Dear parent,

Recently, your child took the Bike Rider Test along with his or her classmates. In this connection, they were instructed in the traffic rules and took a theory test. Furthermore, they went for a ride on public roads where they observed each other to see how safe they are in the traffic.

Teenagers are particularly vulnerable in the traffic

The Bike Rider Test is relevant at this point since your child will become more vulnerable in the traffic when he or she becomes a teenager. Teenagers are ten times more likely to have an accident compared to 6-year-old children. This is why we focus on the safety of teenagers, and parents have an important role to play.

Make agreements with your child regarding traffic behavior

Although the class took the Bike Rider Test, it does not mean that your child is now a reliable bike rider and know everything worth knowing. You, as the parent, still has a role to play!

It is a good idea to clearly discuss with your child how he or she should act in the traffic. For example, you could make rules concerning the use of a bicycle helmet or talk about how dangerous it is if he or she uses their mobile phone during the ride.
